Ward's Junior English Grammar

By C. H. WARD, of the Taft School, Watertown, Connecticut

Ready January 1

“Every teacher of grammar is sentence-hungry,” says Mr. Ward, “and his need increases with his experience, so that he is driven to foraging in arithmetics and histories and Bibles.” Therefore, to prepare “a gorgeous feast” for himself he gathered in, by hundreds and fifties, sentences to exhibit verbs, the right kinds of nouns, predicate nominatives, and the rest, sentences that are human and sometimes colloquial. Then the sentences were assorted, simple exercises and examples were added, and the collection of sentences became a small grammar.

Refreshing Features of
CRAWFORD'S
The Study of English

(A textbook in English for the earlier years of the high school)

1. Its freedom from pedantry.

Utility as an aid to the writing or to the appreciation of English governs the choice of the grammatical and rhetorical subject matter.

2. Its avoidance of too minute instructions that induce self-consciousness on the part of the student.

The author draws a moral from this little verse, which he quotes:

"The centipede was happy quite
Until the toad for fun
Said, 'Pray which leg comes after which?'
This worked her mind to such a pitch
She lay distracted in a ditch,
Considering how to run."

3. The author's willingness to teach secondary school students by unassuming secondary school methods.

An abundance of elementary material is introduced as needed, such as, for example, a discussion of penmanship and hints as to how to read aloud. Furthermore, though flexibility is provided for by the inclusion of optional material in the appendix, this text is so carefully planned in its relation to the time limitations of the school period, week, and year that it relieves the busy teacher of many unnecessary burdens.

4. The original quality of the body of the text and the unusual variety, interest, and, as it were, literary cosmopolitanism of the illustrative material.

Literature is represented in its every mood; there is sentiment, pathos, romance, humor, satire, simple and sententious, classical and homely.

Literature and Music

The COLUMBIA PLAN of Teaching True Appreciation of Literature

In music and literature there is more than correlation; there is identification of thought, feeling, subject matter, structure, and response. The message of literature and music is one—to preserve the spirit of youth, to arouse wholesome emotion, and to quicken the mind and spirit to joyous, complete living. Class-room study of literature may be clarified and vitalized through music.

No teacher of English would neglect the opportunity of having his class listen to the music records of the songs of Burns, Longfellow, or Tennyson. Music is here fitted to poetry. But poetry is music.

Tell the pupils the story of Shakespeare's "Cymbeline." Describe the occasion that called forth that inspiring morning song, "Hark! Hark! the Lark!" What kind of bird is a Lark? What are its habits? Who is Phoebus? Where is "heaven's gate?" Then play

Columbia Record A5484, "Hark! Hark! the Lark!" piano solo by Godowsky. Forget the words. Note Schubert's employment of brilliant chords for "Hark! Hark!" Observe the musical grammar in the phrase corresponding with "To ope their golden eyes." Study the musical progression in the last three lines, "My lady sweet, arise, arise, arise!"

There is no element of poetry—type, rhythm, metre, rhyme, figure of speech, stanza form, or sentence structure that cannot find its identical counterpart in music.

What is true of Poetry is also true of the Drama and Fiction. There is the same element of organization of material and emotional appeal.

The booklet, "Literature and Music," is a complete treatise of the subject, relating all types and elements of Poetry, Drama and Fiction to the corresponding form in music. It contains record and literature lists, exercises and a bibliography of helpful books and magazines. Send for free copy.

Revised Edition

Woolley's Handbook of Composition

THIS new edition has been thoroughly revised and considerably enlarged and is printed from entirely new electrotype plates. The revision has been made by Edward H. Gardner, Associate Professor of Business Administration in the University of Wisconsin. Professor Gardner has availed himself of the author's later ideas and statements as embodied in notes and in his books published after the issue of the original edition of the Handbook. In its new form the work will maintain the authoritative place so long filled by the earlier edition.

The paragraph numbers of the original edition have been retained, and the new material has been so interpolated that those familiar with the original numbering will use the book as an old friend.

Among the New Books

A Second Book of Composition

By THOMAS H. BRIGGS, Columbia University, and ISABEL McKINNEY, Eastern Illinois State Normal School

A text that places special emphasis upon the minimum essentials of everyday oral and written English and conforms to the new idea of teaching English.

Practical Exercises in English

By ROY DAVIS, Boston University

One hundred exercises in pad form, furnishing definite drill in the fundamentals of our language. Teachers are finding it unusually helpful.

A Guidebook to the Biblical Literature

By JOHN FRANKLIN GENUNG, Amherst College

Just what its title implies—a guidebook to the biblical literature, not a substitute for it.
